AN English painter has invented a new solvent for paint. It is said that the solution is simply applied to the paint with a brush, and is then left for a short time, after which the paint may be raped up with facility. The number coats of the solution depends upon the number of courts of paint; four, which may be applied within a quarter of an hour or so of each other, will probably be sufficient in the most hardened case. The solution, which it is alleged caused no injury whatever to the hands or to the brushes, is inexpensive, and produces no smell.

THE LITTLE SNOW-APRITE.

It was Christmas Eve, and little Jack at by the cottage fire, with his head on his mother's lap, for his father had been lost at sea since the last year came in, and ha remembered how happy they had been only one year ago that night, all three seated about the same bright hearth. They were very poor, though his mother had managed to keep the fire bright, and to feed and clothe herself and little boy quite comfortably thus far, but it was by dint of hard labor. She bent over her sewing from early morning until late at night, very thankful to the kind that he might earn money to take care

"Yes," answered little Jack; " and if our supper now." there are any poor little girls or boys without any home, I wish they would come here to-night, and I'd give them my supper and my bed to sleep in, too." And as he sat watching the bright coals, which fell into all sorts of fantastic shapes, he fell to thinking deeply of how 'Oh, mother," said he, now fairly there stood a poor little girl trembling like a leaf with the cold, who begged that she might come in and warm herself by the fire. And Jack took her little blue hand in his, and led her to his own chimney nook. She had eaten all she wished, she said, thought it was very nice; and she thought Jack was very nice, and thanked him a thousand times. Jack wondered that she giew warm so soon, for she kept moving her little chair away from the fire, until she had reached the frustlest corner in the room.

"Why are you so warm?" asked he.

And the little girl said that she had for bed, when the gate latch did been in the cold so long that the fire made her face hurn. Jack tried to be very entertaining, and talked to the shy little stranger as merrily as possible; but she was inclined to be very silent, though she looked amused. Jack asked her where she lived; and

The little girl did not speak, but she gave him a very bright, grateful look, which was beautiful to see, and Jack thought he'd naver seen any one half so pretty. The old house cat purred drearily and monotonously on the hearth, and it was very lonely and silent, and Juck grew as sad as he had been joyful.

The doors were bulted for the night, and Jack and his mother were preparing crisp snow without. Jack rushed wildly for the door, and Jack's mother trembled so that she could hardly stand. She leaned against the table and listened. "Oh, father!" sang Jack's clear, joy-ago I gave an account of an accident gave an account of an accident dian, at our little theater in Newcasti where he was representing the "Demon of the limit," and was engaged in de-scending through the stage to the infernal regions. A supernumerary fisshed a barrelful of red fire through the hole as the drawn was going down, and five minutes leter an undersione demon was being carried home on a stretcher. Weil, Mr. Hammer has met with snother disater. Last week the manager put on au-other piece, entitled "Wild Bill, or the Scout of the Bocky Mountains," and in this Mr. Hammer was to be tied upon the back of an unbroken horse and sent hurling over the edge of the precipice. As notwely in town would lend a horse for the purpose, the manager hired a mule from the captain of the canal-hoat Boaring Maria. During the rehearsals the mule did well enough, but on the first night of the play the footlights must have scared it, for as soon as the savages had tied Wild Bill upon Its back, instead of charging over that awful leth and canvas precipice, it refused to budge.

And when the indian chieftain prodded It in the side with a tin spear it not only let out its heels and kicked that unfortunate brave into the wings, where his apear jammed savagely against the stomach of the prompter, but it reached its head around and made an earnest effort to chew Wiid Bill'a legs. Falling In this, it etood upon three feet and endeavored to reach up to Mr. Hammer and acrape him off with the hoof of his near hind leg. Then the manager came out and tried to start the mule with a whip. But it merely began to wheel round and round, until the tragedian feit seasick; and then it charged up against the scenery, kicked a new atmset to pieces, reduced the entire precipice to eplinters up-et two muslin trees, and finelly hrought up with one leg entangied in the Sea of Galifee, which was pressed into service on this occasion to represent Sait Late. Tols frightened the mule so that it jerked the Sea of Galilee clear over on the stage, and then went into n fit, during which it tumbled, and after rolling over and over Mr. Hammer three or four times it plunged into the orches tra and expired with its haunches in the base drum and its forelegs tearing the hig fiddle into kindling wood. When they untled Wild Hill he rose, wheed the hiood from his none with his alceve, felt his legs to see that they were unbroken, and then he went to the aldermen's office and registered an oath uever to play anything again but low comedy if he should live uine thousand years. The Manufacture of Plance at Hipley, 0. has grown into a notable industry, and one of special interest to the West. Since its establishment, five years age, the Othio Valley Plano Company has turned out apwards of eighteen hundred finished planos, and will this year make five hundred. About one hundred men are complayed, and every part al the plano is made in the lactory. In labor-saving machinery; in organization of the work and facilities for its production; in the general intelligence and knowledge of the workmen, and in the quality of the work produced, this establishment compares facorably with the best Eastern manufactoes, while in economy, in cost of material and production, it has advantages not enjoyed in the East.
